Age-related changes in subjective memory function are often related to increased levels of state and trait anxiety. However, it is yet unclear whether such an association represents a causal relationship. The authors examined whether a higher level of state or trait anxiety predicts reduced subjective memory performance and whether this relationship is moderated by age. A sample of 197 older adults completed self-report and task performance measures of subjective memory and state and trait anxiety. As expected, state and trait anxiety were positively related to subjective memory complaints but not to objective memory performance. Further analyses 1cdb36666d
